Ancient cities were sites of social mobility, the coexistence of different ethnic groups, and many cultural activities. Their politics directly involved citizens. This does not seem to be the case for contemporary cities, especially those in southern Italy. There many small and medium-sized towns are no longer attractive to young people, social life is inert, and cultural activities are almost entirely absent. The Ancient Cities project stems from reflections on the contrast between ancient and contemporary cities and aims to suggest new models for social, cultural, and civic development.
Ancient Cities

1
Series: Ancient cities

«L’ERMA» di BRETSCHNEIDER, Publisher - Rome

Series Editor
ARIEL SAMUEL LEWIN
(Università della Basilicata)

Editorial Board
NATHANAEL ANDRADE (University of Binghamton); PIERANGELO BUONGIORNO (Westfälische Wilhelms-Universität Münster/Università del Salento, Lecce);
ELENA CALIRI (Università di Messina); ALDO CORCELLA (Università della Basilicata);
LUIGI GALLO (Università di Napoli, ‘L’Orientale’);
ANNA HELLER (Université de Tours); RITA LIZZI TESTA (Università di Perugia);
UMBERTO ROBERTO (Università Europea, Roma); SAMUELE ROCCA (Ariel University);
JOHN THORNTON (Sapienza Università di Roma);
ELISABETTA TODISCO (Università di Bari)

International Scientific Board
GUIDO CLEMENTE (Università di Firenze); EDWARD DABROWA (Jagiellonian University, Kraków);
WERNER ECK (Köln Universität); GIAN LUCA GREGORI (Sapienza Università di Roma);
BENJAMIN ISAAC (University of Tel Aviv); JOHN KLOPPENBORG (University of Toronto);
NOEL LENSKI (Yale University); ATtilIO MASTROCINQUE (Università di Verona);
MARIO MAZZA (Sapienza Università di Roma); ANTONINO PINZONE (Università di Messina);
KOENRAAD VERBOVEN (University of Ghent)

Registry Coordinator
STEFANIA GALLOTTA (Università della Basilicata)

Editorial Secretariat
MARILENA CASELLA, ALISTER FILIPPINI, ANNAROSA GALLO, CARLO MARCACCI, GIULIA MARCONI, DONATA VIOLENT
ANCIENT CITIES, 1

ROMAN IMPERIAL CITIES
IN THE EAST AND IN CENTRAL-SOUTHERN ITALY

Edited by
NATHANIEL ANDRADE, CARLO MARCACCINI,
GIULIA MARCONI, and DONATA VIOLANTE

«L’ERMA» di BRETSCHNEIDER
CONTENTS

8  List of contributors
14  A.S. Lewin, Presentazione della collana Ancient Cities
21  N. Andrade, Why Ancient Cities?

I. FROM THE HELLENISTIC POLEIS TO THE ROMAN CITIES

33  S. Gallotta, I Greci, l’acqua e le città
55  J. Thornton, Istituzioni democratiche e tensioni sociali: dalla pólis ellenistica alla città imperiale

II. ROMAN CITIES IN THE EAST

93  A. Heller, Leading Families in the Cities of Roman Asia Minor: a Quantitative Approach
107  H. Fernoux, Les colonies romaines dans le Nord-ouest de l’Asie mineure (Alexandria Troas, Lampsaque, Parion et Apamée-Myrléa): les conditions de leur fondation et leur évolution sociologique à l’époque impériale
141  A.V. Pont, Comment inclure les monothéistes dans une histoire des cités grecques au Haut-Empire? Étude de cas à partir de la Carie
157  E. Borgia, The Role of Client Kingdoms in Cilicia (First Century B.C. – First Century A.D.) within the Promotion of Urbanisation
177  A. Mastrocinque, Tarsus in the Age of Septimius Severus and Caracalla
193  B. Ritter, Judeans in the Cities of Asia Minor: First Century B.C.E. to Third Century C.E
215  F. Grelle, Un municipio grecoloquente in un responso di Cervidio Scevola
227  A. Avram, Titoli onorifici nelle città greche delle coste occidentali e settentrionali del Mar Nero in età imperiale
R. Loreto, Dumata, the Ancient Adummatu. A Caravan Port of Trade on the limes arabicus

E. Dąbrowa, The Title of ‘Colonia’ and Colonisation as Factors in the Development of Cities in Roman Syria

D. Violante, Modelli cittadini e gerarchie urbane nella Galilea del I secolo: il caso di Magdala/Tarichee

D.F. Graf, Palmyra: The Indigenous Factor

III. Roman Cities in Central-Southern Italy

G. Camodeca, Puteoli nel II sec. d.C.: nuovi dati su istituzioni e società

C. Letta, Mutamenti istituzionali nei municipi dell’Italia nella prima età imperiale: il duovirato a Marruvium e l’emissario claudiano del Fucino

M. Silvestrini, Città e proprietà senatoria nella Puglia di età imperiale

E. Miranda de Martino, Neapolis, una città plurale

M.L. Marchi, Riflessioni sulla forma urbana di Venusia e sull’Ager Venusinus. Tra vecchi e nuovi dati

J.S. Kloppenborg, Occupational Guilds and Cultic Associations in Ostia Antica: Patronage, Mobility, Connectivity

S. Rocca, Foreigners at Home: The Historical Geography and Demography of the Jews of Ancient Rome

K. Korhonen, Paesaggi urbani linguistici nella Sicilia romana

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Nathanael Andrade is Associate Professor of History at Binghamton University (SUNY), New York, and he has published extensively on the Roman and later Roman Near East along with other topics. His books include Syrian Identity in the Greco-Roman World, Cambridge 2013; The Journey of Christianity to India in Late Antiquity: Networks and the Movement of Culture, Cambridge 2018; and Zenobia: Shooting Star of Palmyra, Oxford 2018.

Alexandru Avram is Professor of Greek History at the Université du Maine and a researcher at the ‘Vasile Pârvan’ Institute of Archaeology, Bucarest. He is also co-director of the excavations at Istros (Histria, Romania) and a corresponding member at the Istituto Archeologico Germanico. His research mainly focuses on the archaeology and epigraphy of the Black Sea and Asia Minor. He is a collaborator on the Bulletin épigraphique (Revue des études grecques) and the Supplementum Epigraphicum Graecum, particularly for the Black Sea area. He is editor of the journal Il Mar Nero.

Emanuela Borgia is a researcher in Classical Archaeology and Adjunct Professor at the Sapienza, Università di Roma. She is a member and coordinator of archaeological excavations and projects in Italy, Turkey, Egypt, and Great Britain. Her main research topics are the archaeology of Rome, Italy and the Roman provinces; town planning and architecture in the eastern provinces of Roman Empire; Roman and Byzantine architectural decoration; Greek epigraphy in the Roman and Byzantine East; and Roman and proto-Byzantine pottery in the Mediterranean.

Giuseppe Camodeca is Professor of Roman History and Latin Epigraphy at the Università di Napoli ‘L’Orientale’. His work focuses on Roman administrative history, the élites and social history of Roman Campania (including I ceti dirigenti della Campania romana, Napoli 2008 and Puteoli romana, Napoli 2018), editions of Latin inscriptions, and editions and historical-juridical commentaries for the wax tablets archives from Herculaneum and Pompeii (Tabulae Pompeianae Sulpiciorum, 1999; Tabulae Herculanenses, 2016). He is supervisor of the research team that is editing and digitizing the inscriptions from Roman Campania for the online database EDR (Epigraphic Database Roma).
EDWARD DĄBROWA is Professor of Ancient History at the Institute of History, Jagiellonian University in Kraków. His research focuses on the political and military history of Asia Minor, the Middle East, and Iran in the Hellenistic period and under Roman rule. His publications include Legio X Fretensis. A Propographical Study of its Officers (I-III c. A.D.), Stuttgart 1993; The Governors of Roman Syria from Augustus to Septimius Severus, Bonn 1998; The Hasmoneans and their State: A Study in History, Ideology, and the Institutions, Kraków 2010; and Studia Graeco-Parthica: Political and Cultural Relations between Greeks and Parthians, Wiesbaden 2011.

HENRI FERNOUX is Professor of Greek History at the Université de Rennes 2. His research mainly addresses civic societies in Asia Minor in the Hellenistic and Roman imperial periods. His most recent work is Le démos et la cité: communautés et assemblées populaires en Asie Mineure à l’époque impériale, Rennes 2011.

STEFANIA GALLOTTA is Associate Professor of Ancient Greek History at the Università della Basilicata, Dipartimento di Scienze Umane. Her research focuses on ancient Greek colonization in peripheral areas like the Black Sea and the Persian Gulf and on peripheral kingdoms, like the Bosporan kingdom and the Characene kingdom. She also studies tyranny in ancient Greek cities, particularly Heraklea Pontica.

FRANÇOIS GERARDIN is Postdoctoral Research Fellow at the University of Freiburg. His research interests include the eastern Mediterranean in the Hellenistic and Roman periods, with a focus on the second century B.C.E.; papyrology, especially legal; and ancient economy, in particular the economy of ancient cities. In his first book, which is currently in preparation, he uses ancient documents, mostly papyri and inscriptions, to elucidate the importance of the pólis for state formation in Egypt and western Asia in the late Hellenistic period.

DAVID F. GRAF is Professor at University of Miami, Florida. He is an ancient historian and archeologist specializing in the Greco-Roman world in the Near East, and author of Rome and its Arabian Frontier from the Nabataeans to the Saracens, Aldershot 1997. He has excavated in Turkey, Israel, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Egypt. He is currently directing the Hellenistic Petra Project in Jordan and recently was the Seymour Gitin Distinguished Professor at the Albright Institute for Archaeological Research in Jerusalem.

Anna Heller is Professor of Ancient History at the University of Tours. Her main research area is the social and institutional history of the Greek city under Roman rule, as documented by inscriptions from Asia Minor. Her recent work focuses on the topic of civic honours and develops a quantitative approach based on epigraphic sources.

John S. Kloppenborg, F.R.S.C., is Professor and Chair of the Department for the Study of Religion at the University of Toronto. He has published widely in the fields of synoptic studies, the social history of Mediterranean antiquity, and the Letter of James. Among his most recent publications are: Connecting and Belonging in the Ancient City, New Haven 2019; Synoptic Problems, Tübingen 2014; Associations in the Greco-Roman World: A Sourcebook (with P. Harland and R. Ascough), Waco 2012; and Attica, Central Greece, Macedonia, Thrace: Vol. I of Greco-Roman Associations: Texts, Translations, and Commentary (with R. Ascough), Berlin 2011.

Kalle Korhonen is affiliated with the University of Helsinki. He is currently Director of Research Funding at Kone Foundation, Helsinki. His research addresses the epigraphy and sociolinguistics of Roman Sicily. His principal publications include Le iscrizioni del Museo Civico di Catania. Storia delle collezioni – Cultura epigrafica – Edizione, Helsinki 2004; Sicily in the Roman Imperial Period: Language and Society', in Language and Linguistic Contact in Ancient Sicily (ed. by Olga Tribulato), Cambridge 2012; and 'Forme amministrative e scelte linguistiche nelle epigrafi e nelle monete della Sicilia romana' (with Cristina Soraci), Gerión 2019.

Cesare Letta is Professor of Roman History at the Università di Pisa. From 1975 to 1989 he directed the Pisan Archaeological Mission in Collelongo (AQ). Since 2005 he is editor of the journal Studi Classici e Orientali. His research focuses on acculturation and romanization in Italian and Celtic areas, as documented in particular by the Latin and epichoric epigraphy of Abruzzo (regio IV augustea) and the Alpi Cozie; ancient Latin and Greek historiography; and the political and ideological history of the Severan age.

Romolo Loreto is Professor of Archaeology and Art History of the Ancient Near East at the Università di Napoli ‘L’Orientale’. From 2002 to 2010 he was a collaborator on the excavations of the Italian Archaeological Mission in Yemen. Since 2011 he has directed the Italian Archaeological Mission in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, with support from ‘L’Orientale’, the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation, and the Italian Ministry of Education, University, and Research. Since 2013 he has directed the Archaeological Mission of ‘L’Orientale’ in the Sultanate of Oman.
MARIA LUISA MARCHI is Professor of Ancient Topography at the Università di Foggia and the Scuola di Specializzazione in Beni Archeologici (Matera). She directs national and international projects that focus on innovative methodologies applied to ancient topography, including surveys in Puglia and Basilicata. Among her publications are Venosa Forma e Urbanistica, Roma 1997; contributions in the series Forma Italiae: Venusia e Ager Venusinus II (1996 and 2010); Suburbio di Roma, Bari 2008; and Identità e Conflitti tra Daunia e Lucania preromane, Pisa 2016. She is also editor of the conference proceedings Via Appia Regina Viarum, Venosa 2019.

ATTILIO MASTROCINQUE is Professor of Roman History at the Università di Verona. He was Visiting Professor at the École Normale Supérieure (Paris) and directeur d’études at the École Pratique des Hautes Études – Ve section des sciences religieuses (Paris). From 2005 to 2014 he directed archaeological excavations at Grumentum, and since 2016 he has directed an archaeological excavation and survey activities at Tarquinia.

Anne-Valerie Pont is Senior Lecturer at Sorbonne Université, Faculté de Lettres. She is a specialist in the Roman Orient, cities in the Roman Empire, and the interactions between polytheists, Jews, and Christians in civic frameworks. She is the author of The End of the Greek City. Metamorphoses and Disappearance of a Local Political and Institutional Model in Asia Minor, from Trajan Decius to Constantine (High Studies of the Greco-Roman World), Geneva forthcoming.

BRADLEY RITTER is Associate Professor of Classics and Early Christian Literature at Ave Maria University. He has published in the field of philology and the history of early Christianity and Second Temple Judaism. His most recent publications are ‘On the Politeuma in Heracleopolis’, Scripta Classica Israelica, 2011 and Judeans in the Greek Cities of the Roman Empire, Leiden 2015.
Samuele Rocca is Senior Lecturer at Ariel University. He has published many papers in specialized peer-reviewed journals, including the Rassegna Mensile d’Israel, Revue des Études Juives, Israel Numismatic Journal, Athenaeum, and Henoch. He has written encyclopedic entries for the Encyclopedia Judaica and the Encyclopedia of the Bible and Its Reception (EBR), and he is associate editor of 4 Enoch: The Online Encyclopedia on Second Temple Judaism and Christian Origins. He is the author of Herod’s Judaea. A Mediterranean State in the Classical World, Tübingen 2008.

Marina Silvestrini is Professor of Roman History at the Università di Bari. Her research focuses on Latin epigraphy and the history of Roman Italy. Her publications include Un itinerario epigrafico lungo la via Traiana, Bari 1999; Le città della Puglia romana, Bari 2005; La Puglia nel mondo romano. Storia di una periferia. Dalle guerre sannitiche alla guerra sociale, Bari 2013; La Puglia nel mondo romano. L’avvio dell’organizzazione municipale, Bari 2017. She is also editor of Le tribù romane, Bari 2010.

Cristina Soraci is Associate Professor of Roman History at the Università di Catania. Her main fields of research are the social and economic aspects of the Roman world, the history of Roman Sicily, and the transformations introduced by Christianity. She has participated in several conferences in Italy and abroad, and she has published three books, including Sicilia frumentaria. Il grano siciliano e l’annona di Roma (V a.C.-V d.C.)*, Roma 2011, along with many articles in Italian and international specialized peer-reviewed journals.

John Thornton is Full Professor of Roman History at the Sapienza, Università di Roma. He is the author of Lo storico il grammatico il bandito. Momenti della resistenza greca all’imperium Romanum, Catania 2001; Le guerre macedoniche, Roma 2014; and many articles in the field of Hellenistic and Roman history and historiography.

Donata Violante is Research Fellow of Roman History at the Università degli Studi della Basilicata. Her research focuses on the political, administrative, and cultural history of Judaea in the first century A.D. She also maintains interests in the development of the early Christian communities in the social, economic, and institutional context of the cities of the Roman East. Her publications include Paolo e la predicazione ai gentili: la definizione di un’identità nell’impero romano del I secolo d.C., Firenze 2013, ‘Ebrei, gentili e “timorati di Dio” nella predicazione di Paolo’, Mediterraneo Antico 2015, and ‘Gerusalemme: storia e caratteri di una polis’ (forthcoming).
Negli ultimi decenni abbiamo assistito alla proliferazione di studi sul mondo antico che presuppongono l’impiego di nuove metodologie. Modelli quali la New Institutional Economy e la valorizzazione di campi di indagine quali la connectivity, la teoria dei networks, l’integrazione, la mobilità hanno avuto ampia diffusione, giungendo a cambiare la nostra comprensione del carattere delle antiche città. Si è così aperto un nuovo scenario che privilegia la tematica dei contatti fra le persone e fra gruppi come un elemento fondamentale del mondo antico e in particolare della società imperiale romana. Dobbiamo ammettere che il mondo antico era molto più dinamico di quanto si fosse precedentemente ritenuto. La gente era solita viaggiare. I contatti erano il risultato di attività commerciali, ma — in particolare nel mondo di lingua greca — essi erano la conseguenza della partecipazione a feste o competizioni sportive. In queste circostanze, infatti, i notabili erano soliti spostarsi da un luogo all’altro e gli stessi competitori provenivano da tutto il bacino del Mediterraneo.

Ugualmente, anche il carattere della vita politica cittadina è stato interpretato in modo nuovo: nell’epoca imperiale romana, benché i notabili fossero riusciti ad ottenere il privilegio di sedere a vita nei consigli cittadini, non si verificò per questo la fine della politica. Per lungo tempo il dibattito in assemblea rimase una consuetudine importante. Inoltre la partecipazione a cerimonie, feste civiche e a culti religiosi rese più intenso il senso di appartenenza a una comunità o a una classe specifica di individui. All’interno delle città i notabili si mostravano ed erano percepiti come un gruppo rilevante che ostentava i propri privilegi, ma spesso osserviamo come le diverse componenti sociali tendevano a cooperare. In genere la gente della plebs media era desiderosa di acquisire una posizione di rilievo e la pressione di questi gruppi emergenti contribuì a ravvivare la vita politica. In particolare le associazioni di mestiere, arricchitesi grazie all’espansione dell’impero e alla pace romana, giocarono un ruolo molto importante nello sviluppo delle città. Il corpo civico era composto e ben strutturato, uno strumento idoneo a promuovere la coesione civica e la crescita economica. E’ interessante notare in tal senso che gli stessi ginnasi erano frequentati sia dai rampolli delle élite sia da coloro che erano esclusi dai senati cittadini. Dobbiamo ammettere che le antiche città erano luoghi dove erano possibili una vita sociale di buon livello, l’integrazione degli stranieri, la mobilità delle persone e varie attività culturali.

E’ in qualche modo sorprendente che la riscoperta di vari aspetti positivi delle città antiche vada di pari passo con un processo di involuzione delle città dei giorni nostri. Per esempio, molte città dell’Italia meridionale, che hanno più o meno la dimensione di una città media romana (tra i 5000 e gli 8000 abitanti), stanno andando incontro a uno spopolamento. I giovani non le trovano attraenti e non solo per la mancanza di un lavoro. La mancanza di attività culturali e l’impossibilità di avere una vita sociale interessante causano insoddisfazione e il desiderio di emigrare. Allo stesso tempo ovunque nelle grandi città è possibile scorgere segnali disturbanti di estraneità a un comune senso di appartenenza. Queste città appaiono spesso dei luoghi di solitudine, nonostante il proliferare dei moderni mezzi di comunicazione. Inevitabilmente, i nuovi meccanismi lavorativi hanno finito col distorcere radicati sistemi di vita e hanno reso i contatti umani più difficili.

Il contrasto fra le città antiche e quelle dei giorni nostri è alla base delle riflessioni che hanno dato impulso al progetto Ancient Cities. Apparirà così proficuo studiare vari aspetti delle città antiche che potrebbero risultare modelli utili per stimolare nuovi modi di socializzazione, di sviluppo culturale e il senso di un’appartenenza civica, aperta alle diversità e dotata di anticorpi più forti contro il dilagare della cosiddetta società liquida.
Foreword to the series Ancient Cities

Ariel Samuel Lewin

Recent decades have witnessed an intensification of studies on the ancient world that have invited new approaches. Models provided by New Institutional Economics and the contributions made by concepts like connectivity, network theory, social integration, and mobility have accordingly become widespread in ways that are changing our understanding of ancient cities. Contacts among people and groups have become fundamental for the study of the ancient world, and in particular the Roman Empire, and as a result we must accept that the ancient world was much more dynamic than we had previously imagined. People routinely traveled. Commercial activities, feasts, and competitions created contact, especially in the Greek world, and they attracted wealthy spectators and competitors from various cities throughout the Mediterranean basin. Some scholars now claim that popular politics in Roman cities did not end even after their most powerful members had obtained the privilege of membership for life in local senates. In fact, for a long time cities remained vital entities, and political competitors could not ignore debate happening in the assemblies.

All these aspects highlight the dynamism of ancient cities. Participation in public ceremonies, civic feasts, and religious cults intensified what it meant to belong to a community or to a specific group. The wealthy quite often behaved as a special segment of cities that aimed to stress its superiority. Yet, in other situations different elements of the city cooperated, and we can assume that the people of the plebs media were striving for social mobility. In the cities of Greek world in particular there were gymnasia, civic feasts, and competitions in athletics, music, and literature deep into the Roman period. Civic bodies, being vital and well structured, provided social cohesion and economic development. The sons of persons who were not members of local senates frequented gymnasia alongside the scions of the civic elite. In the Roman Empire the development of trade associations represented a central aspect of economic, political, and social life in cities. These groups were involved in the lucrative forms of production and commerce that flourished in the conditions stabilised by the Roman Empire. Being important, trade associations were eager to safeguard their own political and economic interests. The pressure exercised by these groups in pursuit of social mobility in fact prevented political life from being dominated by the longstanding members of the local senates and ensured a vibrant political situation. We must admit that ancient cities were places where it was possible to have a high level of sociability, contact, integration of expatriates, mobility of people, and cultural activity. Politics were a matter of face-to-face encounters.

It is somewhat surprising that the rediscovery of many positive aspects of ancient cities serves as a point of contrast with the devolution of modern-day urban communities. Let us take as example the many towns of southern Italy that have more or less the dimension of an average Roman town, say 5000 – 8000 inhabitants. These towns suffer from depopulation as young people move to more attractive places. Unemployment is not the only cause of this negative trend. The towns are unattractive for young people because they do not offer anything interesting to them. Social life is inert and cultural activities are absent. At the same time many features of large contemporary cities undermine a common sense of belonging. These cities often appear to be places of solitude, even in spite of the proliferation of modern communication systems. New developments in technology have created distortions in life networks and have made human contact more difficult.

The contrast between ancient and contemporary cities is the basis for the reflections that have prompted the idea of the Ancient Cities project. The project aims to study various aspects of ancient cities that could serve as worthwhile models for stimulating new modes of socialization, cultural development and civic belonging that are open to diversity and that prevent the onset of so-called liquid society.
Essays